KALTAG HEAD START PROJECT—Little Athabascan Indian tots of the village of Kaltag are enjoying lunch at the Women's Club house where the villagers are continuing Head Start Program on its own by having bake sales, through donations and volunteer help. Head Start program is the highly thought of project in Alaska's native villages. —Photo by DOUGLAS A. JIMISON

Kaltag Continues Own Head Start

By MARGARET ROSE SEMAKEN
Kaltag, Alaska

Kaltag is a village of 226 people. Last year there were enough funds for a Head Start program.

Unfortunately the program wasn't funded in Kaltag this year. But this did not keep the village from having a Head Start Program.

The women sponsored a bake sale and village dance to raise funds for purchasing some food for a lunch program.

Everyone donated wood to keep the Women's Club house warm where the program is being held. Twenty-four children are enrolled.

With bake sales, donations and volunteer help, the village has continued its Head Start Program.