

Good luck, Roger

Recently, Roger Lang, a long-time Native leader, was incapacitated by a stroke. The shock upon his friends and supporters was deeply felt, for the last thought in anyone's mind was that a man of such vitality and love of life could be hit by such a thing.

We are happy to report that Roger is apparently on the road to rapid recovery, recuperating at Providence Hospital in Anchorage.

Lang's involvement with the Alaska Federation of Natives, with Sealaska Corporation, with the Alaska Native Foundation, with the Tundra Times, and with Native causes and concerns too numerous to list herein, has been long-standing and honorable. He has been an effective and superb spokesman for many, many years.

The Tundra Times, along with his many friends and supporters wishes Roger Lang a speedy and complete recovery. May he be around to help another day.
