

North wind draws bears

by Grace Siwooko
for the Tundra Times

This winter 1987, there was a lot of time when the wind is from the north.

Many times that means the polar bears are coming around at our sea and ice. The piles of broken ice are so beautifully formed. There are mounds of ice here and there at our shores.

Men are using snowmachines a lot for hunting and going places.

There are quite a few men that came home with polar bears killed, too.

I don't take walks to the shore and mountain now, thinking one might be around and close.