

Recruitment For Logging on

James E. O'Rourke, manager of the Alaska State Employment Service in Fairbanks, announced this week that recruitment is now being conducted for a five-week logger training program to begin in Ketchikan on January 20, 1969.

The logging course will include woods safety, employer-employee relations, choker setting, knowledge of falling and bucking, skidding logs, and maintenance of equipment. Both classroom and field experience will be included in the training program, which will provide Alaskans with skills which will enable them to qualify for employment in the logging industry.

Mr. O'Rourke stated that persons interested in the training course should contact immediately the local Employment Service Office, located at 729 Sixth Avenue, P.O. Box 1010, Fairbanks, Alaska, 99701.
