

A poor business climate can stop Alaska cold.

A good one can keep prosperity flowing.

Look around you.

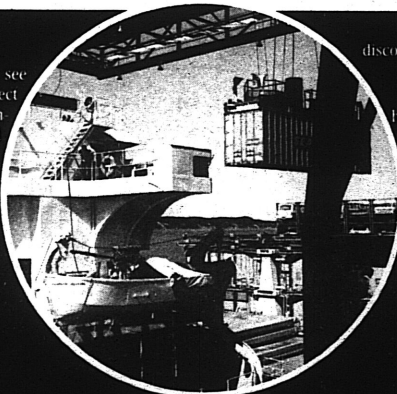

The prosperity you see in Alaska today is a direct result of positive government attitude toward business years ago.

An attitude that resulted in the reasonable regulations and incentives for oil development which led to the discovery of Prudhoe Bay.

In recent years this attitude seems to have changed.

We need a return to that positive attitude in which government encourages future development - to ensure continued prosperity for ourselves and for future generations.
