

Convention stars on statewide TV

The Alaska Federation of Natives' 1990 Annual Convention will be broadcast via the Rural Alaska Television Network to virtually every community in the state with satellite capabilities, according to AFN President Julie Kitka.

The 1990 convention — Oct. 25-27 — will be held at the Egan Convention Center in Anchorage. This year's theme is "Celebrating Alaska Native Cultures and Lifestyles."

"We are grateful to Alascom and RATNET for their continued support of our annual convention," Kitka said. "Because travel to Anchorage is often prohibitively expensive, this coverage has become a very important part of the convention."

Julie Petro, assistant vice president for NANA Regional Corp., Ross Soboleff, director of corporate communications for Sealaska Corp., and Perry Eaton, president/chief executive officer of Community Enterprise Development Corp., will co-host the live coverage.

Programming begins Oct. 25 at 9 a.m.

Anchorage viewers will be able to tune in on Channel 20, and Fairbanks viewers can watch on Cooke Cablevision on Channel 32.

There will be a statewide call-in number to provide viewers with an opportunity to call in questions for the co-hosts and individuals being interviewed throughout the convention.

The statewide call-in number is 263-2824. This number will be broadcast throughout the convention.
