

Peninsula Airways to sponsor Iditarod

Iditarod race officials have announced that Peninsula Airways has become a supporting sponsor of the 1994 Iditarod Sled Dog Race by contributing $35,000 worth of flying service.

"PenAir has become a supporting sponsor of the Iditarod because of its Alaskan origin and strong sense of tradition," said Orin Seybert, president of Peninsula Airways. "Since we are now flying to McGrath and Unalakleet, two of the major communities along the Iditarod trail, we can truly show our support to the people we serve."

PenAir's sponsorship will include the use of a nine-passenger Twin Navajo which will greatly assist the volunteer air force in flying race personnel, freight and dogs between checkpoints with an IFR-rated aircraft.

Peninsula Airways is an authorized commuter service carrier for Alaska Airlines, official airline of the race and also one of its major sponsors.
