MarkAir salutes Al Swalling.

"I feel nothing but optimism about Alaska's future. Just stick with it and in time Alaska will reward you for your hard work."

Alaska is our home.

40 YEARS OF SERVICE • 1947-1987

The first construction project in Cordova during 1934

Al Swalling came to Alaska in 1929 looking for a job. He found one in Cordova with the old Copper Spike Railroad. And he found a lot more as well. So he made Alaska his home.

"It was the people — the tremendous trust and sharing," says Al. "People didn't lock their doors. I lived in the same hotel room for seven years and never had a key. And I'd be gone for a month at a time."

The railroad shut down in the late 1930s. And that was when Al went into the construction business for himself. The next five decades saw him play a role in every important event in Alaska's modern history.

Al says it's perfectly natural to feel optimistic about Alaska's future. Because since 1929 he's joined with Alaskans in pulling together and making their state a better place to live.

MarkAir salutes Al Swalling as part of our celebration of serving Alaskans for 40 years. And just like Al, we're always proud to call Alaska our home.
