

Grandmas to Judge Baby Contest

Five venerable grandmothers will be judging the Native Baby Contest of the World Eskimo Olympics of 1970 on July 31 at the University of Alaska's Patty Gym, Mrs. Betty Wescott, chairman of the contest announced today.

The ladies are: Mrs. Edith Tegoseak, Eskimo Village, Fairbanks; Dorothy Stone, University of Alaska; Bettie Harrop, University of Alaska; Emily Ivanoff Brown, University of Alaska; and Hannah Solomon, Fairbanks Native Welcome Center.

The babies will be judged for wholesomeness and authenticity of their native costumes. The baby entries must be one year old or under. Costumes of the babies' mothers will also figure in the judging.

So far, three baby contest entrants have applied and they are: eight month baby of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Snyder of Mt. Edgecumbe near Sitka; Donna Louise Boston, nine month old baby of Mrs. Lillian Boston, Chistochina; and seven month old son of Donald and Molly Galbraith of Fairbanks.

More baby contestants are expected. For information, interested parents may write to Mrs. Betty Wescott, Box 1287, Fairbanks, Alaska 99701.

The Native Baby Contest committee is in the process of arranging awards for the winning baby.
