

New superintendent named for Klondike

Clay Alderson, superintendent of Cedar Breaks National Monument in Utah, has been selected to serve as superintendent of the Klondike Gold Rush National Historical Park in Skagway.

Alderson will replace Richard Sims, who retired earlier this year.

The National Park Service and local citizens are working together to preserve and restore the historic structures from Skagway's colorful past, and the Klondike Gold Rush National Historical Park today is drawing record numbers of visitors.

Alderson is to arrive in Skagway early this month.
