

Welfare Dept. Gets Kendall For Position

Miss Kay Kendall who recently arrived in Alaska as Institutions and Foster Care Consultant, in the Division of Public Welfare, Alaska Department of Health and Welfare entered a position which has never been filled before.

"With the arrival of Miss Kendall, our Welfare Division is fully staffed for the first time in many years," said Stanley Harris, Director Division of Public Welfare.

Miss Kendall said the inspiration for her coming to Alaska came from her grandfather, Julius J. Krug, a former Secretary of the Interior.

Miss Kendall's father traveled the entire state and met everyone from the Governor to the natives at Point Barrow.

One of her grandfather's cherished photos was of him milking a cow at the University of Alaska experimental station. Miss Kendall believes he established a family "record" for the most northern milking on United States soil.
