Roast Turkey

By HAROLD RIACH
Wrangell, Alaska

It has been windy in Wrangell for the last couple days. In fact, many southeast Alaskan cities had strong winds up to 70 miles per hour. In some places much damage was done.

In many cities, including Wrangell, the power was off on Thanksgiving because of the strong winds.

Many people had a hard time trying to get their turkey roasted in their oven, I bet.

Wrangell was lucky that the power was off only about two hours altogether. Some cities had the power off for many hours.

barrels a day of foreign crude oil into the Sub Zone, and could also use it to import 100,000 barrels a day of refined products from the Sub Zone into the customs territory of the United States.

The Georgia Ports Authority and Tenneco Oil Co. have filed similar applications with the Federal Foreign Trade Zone Board and the Interior Department which would allow them to import and refine 200,000 barrels a day of foreign crude at Savannah, Ga., and other companies reportedly are considering similar applications.

"For the moment," Hickel declared, "our goal must be to secure an injunction preventing the approval of these applications."

"The ability to import foreign oil without stringent quota limitations would induce oil companies to spend their exploration and production dollars in foreign countries—thereby reducing exploration and production activities in domestic areas such as Alaska."

Trade Sub Zone applications are approved, "Alaska will undoubtedly be the hardest-hit of all the states."

He added, "I have been advised that there is sufficient basis upon which to conclude that these applications cannot be legally granted."

"Consequently, Atty. Gen. Edwards has filed a suit which seeks a declaratory judgement that the establishment of this
