

Editorial —

Most of the Natives and all of the smart folks are out in the country this time of year. Living at summer camps and traveling the rivers and the sea renews the spirit and energy of the people, and feeds the souls of Natives with necessary nourishment. Many villages are empty and quiet now as our people are out in the land. The resources collected this season will happily end up on many dining tables the rest of the year. While there are many joys to this way of life, there are also dangers. Our sympathy and condolences go to the families and friends of the young men for whom the poem published below was written. And we ask our friends and readers now out in the country to take care so as to have a peaceful and safe summer season.
