

Nunapitchuk

Robert Nick, Headstart teacher in Nunapitchuk, recently announced the formation of a parent-teachers organization in his village and has suggested that other villages consider organizing such groups.

Nick, who is also secretary of the village council, attended the University of Alaska this summer in training for his headstart teaching position. Nunapitchuk is a village of about 450 people near Bethel.

Nick said he felt the parent-teacher organizations brought the people of the village closer to the school and would be a useful tool in solving community-school problems.

He noted that such organizations were increasing in the Yukon-Kuskókwim area.
