

Five rural students get Arco scholarships

Five high school seniors from rural Alaska are among 18 students to receive scholarships from Arco Alaska, according to Arco President Bill Wade. Awards of $2,000 were made to 15 students, with grants of $1,000 going to three others.

Rural winners are:

•Kimberly Michele Antoghamé, an honor student and poet at John Apangalook Memorial High School in Gambell. Antoghamé plans to become an elementary school teacher. She is the daughter of Thomas and Shirley Antoghamé and received a $2,000 grant.

•Jolene N. John, student council president and an all-around athlete at Nelson Island High School in Toksook Bay. John intends to study mathematics and hopes to return to rural Alaska as a high school teacher. She is the daughter of Paul and Martina John and received a $2,000 grant.

•Clarence L. Daniel, student council president and an honor student at Lewis Angapak Memorial school in Tuntutuliak. Daniel plans to study science or math and hopes to become a teacher. He is the son of David and Barbara Daniel and received a $2,000 grant.

•Sophie A. Sergie, honor student, athlete and student body president at Pitka's Point High School, St. Mary's.

Sergie plans to study oceanography. She is the daughter of Elena Sergie and received a $2,000 grant.

•Joshua Don Gillespie, a scholar and outstanding cross-country skier from Koyuk who completed high school in Homer. Gillespie plans to attend Dartmouth College and hopes to pursue a business career. He is the son of Donald and Lynn Gillespie of Koyuk and received a $1,000 grant.
