

PT. HOPE TERRITORIAL GUARD—Lacking uniforms but not spirit, Point Hope men during World War II are doing close order drilling on the village grounds. The men are using Enfield Army rifles. They may not look like a regular military men but they are known as some of the most accurate rifle marksmen anywhere in Alaska. Men like them are subjects of the book, "Men of the Tundra," interestingly written by Major Marvin "Muktuk" Marston whose photo is shown at right as he looked during his command of the Guards. The book is now on sale in the office of the Tundra Times.
