

Movie Crew Films College Life At Sheldon Jackson College

High Call Productions of Seattle began filming a motion picture on college life at Sheldon Jackson College Monday morning. The film, to be used by the college throughout Alaska, tells about four students—what they find difficult about college life, what they like and don't like, and shows them in class situations and extra curricular activities.

Included are scenes of a geology field trip aboard the SJS II, flight training in the school aircraft, skin diving, etc.

Dr. Orin Stratton, President of Sheldon Jackson College, said "In this film we have let the students tell their own story and then written the film around what they told us. Their actual, unrehearsed conversation will be used in the soundtrack. It was the best way we could find to 'tell it as it is.' "

Directing the film is J. Graley Taylor who says that this is the first time he knows of that a motion picture has been put together in this manner. He remarked that it is an exciting concept to him.

The four students with major roles in the picture, which is being filmed in black and white for a documentary effect, are Louie Baggen of Sitka, John Gunderson of Sand Point, Alaska, Flossie Hopson of Barrow, Alaska and Cathy Carlson of Bellevue, Washington.
