Apprenticeships available!

Harley Huntington, Koyukuk, works with BLM mentors to narrate a slide show about plants and wildlife on the Seward Peninsula.

Resource Apprenticeship Program for Students

RAPS is an excellent opportunity for you to earn money, acquire valuable on-the-job education and to grow personally. Each summer about 50 youth from across the state are matched with resource specialists.

To apprentice in RAPS, you must be motivated, mature and have an interest in natural resources. RAPS participants are usually juniors and seniors from rural high schools.

Students who apprentice with RAPS are interested in learning about Alaska's natural resources. You can learn about biology, archeology, public relations, environmental regulation, forestry, recreation planning, surveying and a variety of other careers. Seniors are also eligible for a one-year, full-tuition waiver and a college credit from the University of Alaska Fairbanks.

Some apprenticeships require that you live away from home, either in a different city, field camp or agency bunkhouse. Host families, who provide a friendly place to stay, are available.
