

Human Rights Commission Meet at Nome

ANCHORAGE — The seven-member Board of Commissioners to the Alaska Human Rights Commission will hold a three-day meeting in Nome April 23, 24 and 25.

The announcement came from Robert Willard, the Agency's Executive Director in a release from his Anchorage Headquarters.

The Board will hear a full report on Commission activity from the Executive Director and will meet with any group or organization. The meetings are open to the public. The director said, and comments or questions on Commission performance is solicited.

Willard said there will be many items on the Agenda including a status report on cases presently being handled by the Commission staff.

The place and time for the meetings have not yet been announced, but will be at a later date.
