Alaska Head Start Terminated . .

And now, as the ones who have known Head Start and the others who have watched and want it for their communities flood ASCAP with their requests and their proposals for the next winter Head Start program, the real strength of the program is revealed.

The people of Noorvik say it as well as any. "We will teach songs...comb hair...read stories...donate fish and native food...help build plywood floors...or painting, fix windows, or do anything."

And the plucky folk of White Mountain, like those of several villages in Alaska, willing to run a program for their children even if ASCAP's shrunken budget cannot help them, write "everybody agrees to work as much as they can to do it."

In the special code of the War on Poverty, that is called involvement. Its the ingredient that makes the difference. Head Start is here.
