A study of the suitability of several streams in the Umnak-Unalaska islands area for a salmon fishery rehabilitation program will be made possible through a $25,500 grant by the Economic Development Administration to the Aleut League.

An additional $9,450 will be provided by the Aleut League to supplement funding of the 14-month field study, according to an announcement by the agency.

Work is to include examination of possible sites for gravel incubation systems for both commercial and subsistence salmon fishery restoration. The proposed project was reviewed and endorsed by the Alaska Department of Economic Development.
