

England's Miss Hollick Corrects Times' Error

Scott Polar Research Institute of Cambridge, England has been our steady subscriber ever since shortly after the Tundra Times began to publish on October 1, 1962.

Miss K. A. Hollick, writing for the librarian of the Institute, sent us a note saying she was missing an issue, Vol. 4 No. 60, February 24, 1967.

"If you could send us a copy we should be most grateful as we like to keep a complete file," she said.

And then Miss Hollick hastened to add:

"May we take the liberty of telling you (as others may also have done) that the issues for 21 October, 1966 and 28 October, were both numbered No. 43 and that you are still numbering your issues one unit too low!"

The staff is sorry for the oversight that has gone on for about seven months and we are thankful to Miss Hollick for pointing it out.

Last week's issue was numbered Vol. 4 No. 72, "one unit too low" and it has been corrected this week and it now reads Vol. 4 No. 74 instead of No. 73 which would, of course, still be one unit too low.

We are most grateful to you, Miss K. A. Hollick, for correction all the way from Cambridge, England.
