Area Director

Alaska's North Slope isn't the world's richest oil province. But it does represent the largest North American discovery, one of our major domestic reserves of this priceless energy.

Naturally, we're enthusiastic about our state's oil potential. But we're also aware of the concerns many Alaskans have about becoming overly reliant on any single industry as an economic base.

We hope you will see that the cost of supporting our state must be divided among all who will benefit. Because, in the long run, only an equitable division of this cost will assure the advantages any new development can bring to our state. And that means a better way of life for us all.
