Two women employees of the U.S. Public Health Service have been given special recognition from the Alaska Area Native Health Service for acts of bravery. Each woman rescued a person from drowning.

Mrs. Offenesia Yako of Kana-kanak received a certificate of commendation for going to the rescue of 17-year-old Mike Andrews when he fell fully clothed from a raft in a lake.

The diminutive Mrs. Yako maneuvered her 13-foot wooden skiff with only one oar from the shore to the drowning boy. Using procedures remembered from a water safety film she once saw, Mrs. Yako pulled the heavy boy over the side of the skiff and was prepared to give mouth-to-mouth resuscitation if he did not resume breathing.

A check for $500 has been awarded by the Alaska Area Native Health Service to Ella (Mrs. John) Kinegak of Bethel for her daring rescue of five-year-old Timothy Evon from the swift cold waters of the Kusko-kwim River.

Mrs. Kinegak, also a tiny person, plunged into the storm-rolled river to try to reach the child who had fallen in and was being borne rapidly downstream by the current.

Failing here, the intrepid Eskimo jumped in a boat being launched by 12-year-old Ricky Strauss and directed the boy's rowing to a spot where she could again attempt to pluck the child from death in the river.

Mrs. Kinegak had to jump into the water a second time to reach the now lifeless child and then put him into the boat. There she applied artificial respiration until breathing resumed.

Governor Walter J. Hickel presented Mrs. Kinegak with the rarely-given Governor's Medal at an informal breakfast ceremony when he was in Bethel earlier this fall. Mrs. Yako and Mrs. Kinegak are profoundly modest of their heroic actions.

Both women are long-time PHS employees and each works in the laundry of the PHS Hospital in her community.

UA to Train School Rural Administrators

COLLEGE—The University of Alaska has received a $10,000 grant to start a program for training administrators for rural schools in Alaska.

The grant was made by the U.S. Office of Education after application by Dr. Dayton Benjamin of the Education Department. The program will begin next fall with five fellowships for a year-long course on Alaska rural education.

"The University of Alaska is taking leadership in training administrators for Alaska schools," Benjamin said. "Very few of those who come into the state are trained in Alaskan institutions of higher education."

He said the program will strengthen the university's graduate program in training administrators, supervisors and guidance personnel for rural schools.

The five graduate fellows will be the first candidates to complete a sixth-year program leading to an educational specialist degree.

At present the university does not award the Ed.S. degree, but part of the federal funds will be used to enable the university to add the degree to its graduate program, Benjamin said.

Candidates will take course work in education and academic disciplines and will conduct an assessment survey of educational needs of rural youth.

Benjamin said the program will increase the competence of the graduate fellows and will show educational needs of Alaska natives.
