

Dispositions approved for civil cases

The Alaska Supreme Court held June 8 that persons living more than 100 miles from the place of a civil trial, motion hearing, or interlocutory proceeding should in most cases be allowed to testify by deposition unless they show a desire to avoid a personal appearance before the court.