An Olympic invitation

Whether it is through political pressure or personal decision, the United States track and field team may boycott the 1980 Summer Olympic Games which will be hosted by the Soviet Union in Moscow. Because of the years of training and financial hardships, any decision reached by the athletes will be painful.

Should they boycott the games, official team members are invited to participate in the World Eskimo-Indian Olympics. There they will have the opportunity to demonstrate their sport and will be welcome to compete in Native games. The thrill of victory and agony of defeat, sportsmanship and skill are the stuff the Eskimo-Indian Olympics are made of. Other countries wishing invitations are requested to write the Tundra Times.
