

Jane Involved in Local Government

AFN employee Jane Angvik is getting involved in local government in Anchorage by running for the Charter Commission in the upcoming Feb. 11 election.

The Charter Commission is charged with the responsibility of developing a system to unify the functions of the city and borough of Anchorage.

Jane feels that the present duplication of services is wasteful from the taxpayers point of view and inefficient from a management perspective. She is also very concerned about citizen participation in decision-making.

When previously employed at the borough as a land use planner, Jane noted that residents were very frustrated in trying to make government responsive to them.

Therefore she strongly supports a charter which would give the voters back the right to determine what services they want and how much they will pay for them.

Jane works in the Technical Assistance Department. She has been with AFN since July and has been involved with manpower programs, pipeline impact and minority contracts related to the pipeline.
