Many of the awards the Tundra Times has received recently are a direct result of Steve Pilkington's investigative reporting abilities.

Steve's series on the state's post-mortem system won first place for a non-daily from the Alaska Press Club and first place news series from the Native American Press Association.

Steve first began writing for the Tundra Times in 1987 after moving from Riverside Calif. He has covered fishery news, bingo fraud, the 1991 amendments and many other issues important to Alaska Natives. Steve said that through his work at the Tundra Times he has gained a better understanding of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act than most non-Natives.

Besides Steve's volunteer work at the Tundra Times, he is also a senior at the University of Alaska Anchorage. His studies, however, have not kept him from becoming involved in Native issues.

"Through the Tundra Times I've been able to do things many people from the Lower 48 don't get the chance to do — like visit some of Alaska's remote Native villages. That's something I'll never forget."
