

Opposition to Bristol Bay Utility Corridors Unanimous

from Bristol Bay By-Lines

Testimony at the hearing last week in Naknek on transportation and utility corridors was unanimous in its opposition to such corridors coming into and through Bristol Bay.

The Federal-State Land Use Planning Commission held the hearing Tuesday at Naknek to give individuals an opportunity to be heard with regard to their feelings on:

1. A road and related utility corridor from Rex to McGrath to Aniak; then splitting into two corridors, one to Bethel and the south fork to Dillingham.

2. A road and related utility corridor from Anchorage through the Lake Clark Pass to Naknek and Dillingham.

3. A road and related utility corridor from King Salmon to Cook Inlet at Chenik.

Witnesses gave a number of reasons for opposition to such corridors and roads: such roads chop up areas used for subsistence and cause loss of game;

upset the environment; the countryside will be raped as the fish were; roads would create greater problems for game management control.

Gust Griechen of Pilot Point said the people had already witnessed the wanton waste brought on by aircraft; roads would destroy spawning grounds; bring pollution, corruption.

Helena Andree, Rural Alcoholism counselor, was concerned that roads will mean more liquor licenses.

Charles Myers, Jr., Egegik Village Council, is against any roads coming in. The money could be used for better purposes such as getting the Japanese out of the high seas, he said.

Charles Hornberger, a resident of the Bristol Bay Borough, suggested using road money to build better airports in the villages and feeder roads to these airports. He suggested a state subsidized freight haul.

Another witness suggested "shake off the political power of the highway trust and use the imagination. Roads are not a practical solution to transportation here."

A number of witnesses stated they would like to see money used for local service roads. Harvey Samuelsen, president of BBNC, noted that interconnection of local villages by roads is met with favor by some villages in the area.

Villages in Bristol Bay were represented at the hearing by the Bristol Bay Area Development Corporation and Bristol Bay Native Corporation.

A number of villages, however, sent in their individual representatives making a total of 16 who gave testimony.

"We are not ready for roads, and we don't want them pushed on us," were the sentiments of these people.

At a potlatch Saturday honoring her mother, Virginia Dows, 15-year-old Diana Dows passes out gifts to the people, including Simon Pilot of Nulato, second from left, now a Fairbanks resident. Next to him is Carol Drake, a boarding home counselor who helped to organize the potlatch.

The Alaska Festival of Music, June 8-20, brings to us many internationally acclaimed musicians, for the enjoyment of all. Artists such as Rafael Druian, concertmaster of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, Ernst Muhlbacher of the Vienna Symphony, and Richard Weitach, associate director of the Metropolitan Opera of New York will be on hand for this year's event; along with the Chicago Contemporary Dance Theater, a film festival, and much more.

That's why Exxon USA is pleased to be sponsoring The Gil Mellé Quartet, whose experimental electronic jazz has created a new wave in music. "This is a major musical departure," states Mr. Mellé. And we agree. The Elec-Tar, Percussotron II, the Effects Generator, and the D-C-S III Synthesizer are far from ordinary musical instruments. Leonard Feather, noted jazz critic, describes the effect as "like that of descending from a spaceship to take a leisurely drive...in a convertible with the top down and the breeze wafting in from the ocean."

The Gil Mellé Quartet is the first electronic jazz group to perform live. And it's brought to you first by Exxon USA. It's our way of plugging into the nineteenth annual Alaska Festival of Music and the future of sound.
