guardian of Alaska's economy

Truly an unlikely looking defender. But nevertheless, an effective one. It's the basic tool for the quality control of Alaska's most important industry—canned salmon!

Throughout the year it is used at the Northwest Research Laboratory on more than 150,000 cans of salmon which have been drawn at random from the pack. This is done to guarantee industry compliance with the general requirements of the Food and Drug Administration.

It's also put to work on hundreds of unlabeled, unidentified samples at the Annual Canned Salmon Cutting Demonstration. Careful analysis reveals the average quality of the previous year's pack enabling the packers to prepare the best possible technical program for the coming season.

By guarding the quality of canned salmon, thus insuring continued acceptance, the Association of Pacific Fisheries' can opener is guarding the economy of Alaska!
