Early Wednesday, Havelock led, 14,675-12,821.

But at 4 a.m. this morning, Hensley pulled ahead by several hundred votes.

Hensley supporters in Fairbanks said they felt the still uncounted bush votes could put the Eskimo legislator ahead.

Unofficial, incomplete returns also showed some other interesting results:

In House District 15, in the Aleutian Chain, Democratic newcomer Alvin Osterback won over Boris Kosbruk and former Aleut Corp. President Michael Swetzof and will face Republican incumbent Jacob Lakten in the general election.

In House District 16, for Bristol Bay, former executive director of the Bristol Bay Native Corp. Nels Anderson Jr. ousted incumbent Joe McGill and appears a shoo-in for the seat, with no Republicans even running.

Incumbent Rep. Phillip Guy, D-Kwethluk easily won renomination by Democrats in House District 17, Bethel, and will face Republican Henry Shavings in November.

Democrat Leslie Swanson stopped fellow Democrats Mitch Demientieff, Harvey Black and Rep. Larry Petersen in the Yukon-Tanana House District 19 primary. Swanson will face Rep. Lavell Wilson, R-Tok, in this reapportioned district.

Running unopposed for the Democratic nomination in House District 21 was Brenda Itta of Barrow. She is also unchallenged to date for the general election.

Rep. Frank Ferguson, who lost the primary to Itta last time and then won victory as an independent in the general election, is battling Rep. Chuck Degnan, D-Unalakleet for the single Senate seat in reapportioned Senate District P. They were locked in a tight race early Wednesday, with many villages still unreported.

In Nome House District 22, Al Nakak was leading by a wide margin, but with only 5 of 23 precincts reporting.

Incumbent Ed Naughton easily won the Democratic nomination in House District 14, for Kodiak and incumbent State Sen. Kay Poland was unopposed in her bid for another Democratic nomination. She'll face Republican James Fisk Jr.

Among the highlights in Anchorage were the Democratic berth for Clark Gruening in the race for Anchorage House District 7. Gruening, an attorney for the Chugach Native Corp., is the grandson of the late U.S. Sen. Ernest Gruening.

Close and Tight—

State Senate and House Candidates

By CHUCK MALLEY

An incredibly close race for the nominations in Senate District 20 ended with a scant three-vote difference between three Republican candidates, two of whom will win out.

Election officials said it may be Friday until the winners can be declared between John Butrovich and John Holm, each with 3,395 votes, and Selwyn Carrol, 3,392.

The race was the closest in memory in the Fairbanks area.

Unopposed Democratic winners for the 20th District Senate nominations were Bob Hamme with 3,089 votes and John Huber with 2,652.

Democrat Mike Bradner piled up 5,607 votes Tuesday to lead a 17-man scramble for seats in the State House of Representatives, District 20.

A consistent leader at the polls, Bradner is a prime candidate to be chosen House speaker following his expected election in November.

Other Democrats successful in the District 20 House primary were Ed Orbeck with 4,466 votes, Steve Cowper, 3,176; Tim Wallis, 3,081; Charles Parr, 3,018 and Fred Brown, 2,794.

Republican winners are Sam Barnes, 2,926 votes, Don Bennett, 1,575; Glenn Hackney, 4,948; Tom Jensen, 3,751; James Joiner, 1,399, and David Wood, 2,352.

The seventh Republican in the race, Charles Richmond, was narrowly eliminated, receiving 1,196 votes. Three Democrats falling short of election were Thomas Morris, 1,231; Brian Rogers, 2,506; and H.O. (Red) Williams, 2,296.

On the Capitol move initiative, Fairbanks voted in favor of making the move, 4,779 to 4,542 after saying no to the same question on two previous occasions.

Fairbanks has long been considered the swing-vote for a

Capitol move and this time combined with the Anchorage area to put the measure over.

Southeast voted nearly 20-1 to keep the Capitol in Juneau.

The plan calls for locating the new governmental center somewhere between Anchorage and Fairbanks, but not less than 30 miles from one or the other of those cities.

A site location committee will be created and an eventual vote by the electorate will pinpoint the new location.

King Island Dancers Dance At Adak Is.

By BETZI WOODMAN

NOME — Six members of the King Island Eskimo dancers who live on the outskirts of Nome made a nearly 3,500-mile round trip to participate in a festival on Adak Island in the Aleutians last week.

Although direct air distance from Nome to Adak is 922 miles, the sextet had to go via Anchorage which lengthened the distance considerably to the U.S. Navy facility.

Those making the trip were Dominick and Ethel Thomas, their 16-year-old daughter Karen, Ursula and Frank Elanna and Anita Sirloak, 17.

The invitation to dance for the Navy's annual "Klondike Night Festival" came in March. Arrangements were made by the naval base executive officer. These included all expenses and per diem for the performers who were gone five days.

It is the first time any of this group has been invited to the distant island and the dancers were eagerly anticipating the trip and the new experience.

of the relocatable structures and replacement equipment is estimated at $450,000.

Fuel tanks will be rehabilitated, generators will be replaced, and school supplies destroyed in the fire are being re-ordered on an emergency basis. Clearing of the fire site has already begun and representatives from the school system met with village residents and advisory school board members in arranging for temporary school quarters for the month of September.

It is estimated that the new quarters will be ready in early October. State-Operated Schools staff will immediately begin working with faculty of the school on curriculum and program planning and replacement of materials and supplies.

State-Operated Schools staff will continue to work closely with the residents of Nondalton, the Alaska Disaster Office, State Departments of Public Works, Environmental Conservation, Community and Regional Affairs, the Governor's Office and other agencies and groups in its efforts to provide an educational program with as little interruption as possible.

Wasted Meat . . .

would investigate.

"I'm glad they will investigate but the problem should never have occurred in the first place, if they had decent management and enforcement of fish and game regulations," Sackett said.

"Hunters coming out of the Arctic Village hunting grounds and other hunting areas must be checked to see if they brought back the meat," he said.

Sackett noted that the Alaska Legislature last year defined all edible parts of big game that could be taken out, for the purpose of better enforcement of the law. "But the administration of this act has evidently been non-existent.

"It does no good to pass these laws if they are not going to be implemented," he said.

Retires After 30 Years—

'Moe' Samuelson

FAIRBANKS — Moses "Moe" Samuelson, well known Eskimo Yukon 800 racer, and although less known in his everyday job with which he makes a living, is slated to retire from his work this Friday (August 30, 1974) after a long 30 year stint as a plumber and steamfitter at Ladd Field and Fort Wainwright near Fairbanks.

Moe is well known as a perennial participant on the annual Yukon 800 boat race on the Yukon River and "I am probably the oldest member on that race having spent 15 years on it."

Samuelson is originally from Bethel. He is married to Ruth and they have five children "and one is a step child, Jerry Woods."

Moe turned 50 years old last Friday August 23.

"I have been working a long time at Fort Wainwright and I'm proud of it. It shows, I think, that a Native can work long enough to retire with a nice pension."

He started working back in 1944 at the then Ladd Field which was later renamed Fort Wainwright.

Moe has never won the Yukon 800 "although with Andy Jimmie, we placed third three years ago. If I had started with all-Native crew years ago, I bet I could have won some of those races, and in those years also, I have had plenty of bad luck."
