

NGS Films to Be Shown in Rural Schools

Nineteen National Geographic Society films will be circulated throughout Alaska's rural schools, Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, announced this week.

Stevens requested the films because, he said, he believed they would be of immense educational benefit to native Alaskans and provide the villages with the beauty and excitement viewed by others on television.

The Senator specifically requested the use of a film on Siberia which he felt would be of special interest to Alaskan villages.

The films will be distributed through the Rural School Office in the State Department of Education, which services 160 State and BIA rural schools.
