

From Provideniya to Oklahoma, Holly Reimer has represented the Tundra Times for more than five years.

In Provideniya, Holly met and wrote about Soviet Natives. As an Inupiat Eskimo, this subject is very close to her. The people she talked to are a part of her history as well as Alaska's and Siberia's.

In Oklahoma, Holly represented the Tundra Times at the National Native American Press Association's fifth annual newspaper contest. Holly walked away with a second place award for Best News Reporting and a third place award for Best Feature Writing. The Tundra Times received the overall award for general excellence.

Much of the reason the Tundra Times won the general excellence award has to do with the work Holly does every day. As Production Manager, Holly takes the written articles and arranges them in the paper — a job that takes creativity and nerves of steel.

Holly and the others at the Tundra Times are all working to continue Howard Rock's dream. The dream of Native people united — with the Tundra Times as their voice.