

Barter Island Man Offered Good Job

Dolores Gilsdorf visited Fairbanks recently. She is from Kaktovik, Barter Island and she is the daughter of Harold and Alice Killbear of that village.

She told the Tundra Times that her brother Billy Killbear has already been offered a job by the Chris Berg Construction Company of Anchorage after completing his training at the Automotive and Diesel Mechanics of the Greer Technical Institute, Inc. of Chicago.

Billy is expected to complete his course in May and will go to work in June.

Hugh P. Harshbarger, Education Director of the Institute, told the Times in February that he hoped that employment for Billy might be available in Alaska.

Dolores said that her mother Alice Killbear likes to read about Aunt Mumangeena and Uncle Nayukuk in the Times. She knew them as a little girl at Point Hope many years ago.

Dolores said that the people of Kaktovik were complaining about the price of drum fuel oil that is now selling at $59.95 per drum. The price used to be around $23 per drum.
