Help for Natives

To the editor:

I seen a group on cable television asking for a small amount of money (donation), their cause being to help out our Native Americans by purchasing grains, flour, wheats, from the American Farmer.

After viewing this scenario on television I asked out loud why not help out our Native American people and just give them the food they need.

It is bad enough that the U.S.

government ordered genocide against our people, break their own treaties and take our lands, but now I am deeply saddened that there are those who use starving hungry people as a way to generate money. Whatever happened to giving to one another — food, shelter and clothing — without some sort of pricetag attached?

Sincerely,
Ron Mancil
