

Wade Decides

Not To Seek Office

Hugh J. Wade, Solicitor for the Department of Interior in Alaska and former Secretary of State under the Egan Administration will not be a candidate for Congress.

Wade, a highly respected Alaskan has long been regarded as a formidable Democrat for any office he might seek having also been elected Territorial Treasurer prior to statehood. He held the Secretary of State post for two terms.

Wade's decision was revealed by John Rader who has filed as the Democratic candidate for the seat now held by Republican Pollock.

Rader said, "Hugh told me that he would not be a candidate and that he personally supported my candidacy. He also made a much appreciated financial contribution. Rader added: For all of this I am proud and thankful."
