

HOME IS MARY'S IGLOO -- Brother and sister, Larry and Agatha Asagroak, are the only two year-round residents of Mary's Igloo. Still living by dogteam and the old subsistence life ways of the region, these Eskimo people retain a deep and intimate knowledge of the landscape and its wildlife that derives from long ages of survival in the Far North. Their home, as well as their hunting and fishing grounds, lie adjacent to the proposed Chukchi-Imuruk National Reserve on the Seward Peninsula.

(National Park Service photograph)