

Stop and Ask Questions

Passengers enroute to Alaska by way of Seattle-Tacoma International Airport now have a place to stop and ask questions about their final destination. An Alaska Information Center is now operational on a 12-hour basis through Sept. 15.

The booth, staffed by a three-member crew headed by Cathy Clark, is located on the main ticket concourse between the Western Airlines and the Alaska Airlines ticket counters. The space was donated by the Port of Seattle.

The Information Center will carry a full range of brochures for traveler distribution, and staff members will offer up-to-date news about pipeline employment as well as current information about tourism.