

Urban Native radio seeks volunteers, staff

Koahnic Broadcast Corporation (KBC) is seeking individuals for staff and volunteer positions at "Alaska's New Native Voice," KNBA 90.3 FM - Anchorage's newest and the nation's first urban Native radio station which will be signing on in early 1996. The station will complement KBC's national and regional production activities, including the "National Native News" program, which reports on important Native issues and is now heard on over 150 radio stations across the nation; and the KBC Training Center, which gives Native youth and professionals opportunities to advance in media professions.

KBC is recruiting individuals to apply for positions as reporter, program/talk show host, producer, community outreach/fund-raiser assistant, listener response/music library assistant, board operator, engineer, and chaperone. Training for program hosts and board operators will be available from the KBC Training Center. The four-day KNBA Volunteer Training program will offer participants basic production techniques, taught by trainer Norman Jayo, as well as announcing techniques, taught by trainer Audrey Wells, with the schedule developed by Susan Kernes, Training Center Curriculum Developer. Interested individuals should contact Linda Mack at (907)258-8890.
