1961. Leo-Kriska was on top of the world that year. At least in mushing circles. He fielded a world championship caliber team.

Then, early in 1962, Leo lost 9 of his 14-dog winning team to frozen lungs and cut feet when he was forced to drive them beyond their limits to help save a neighboring couple stricken with a sudden illness.

This tragedy put Kriska out of racing competition for 10 years. But during that time he worked toward acquiring and training a new set of sled dogs.

This art is certainly not new to Alaskans. Mushing has been a means of transportation for many years. But it's also one of the fastest growing international winter sports.

And now Kriska's back in the running. Ready to compete. Naturally, he's out to win. But just being able to run with the world's best is enough for mushers like Leo.

We're glad he's racing under

Humble sponsorship. Because we've learned, as we go about our business of making good products and a fair profit, that there's added satisfaction in doing something more for people. Humble is doing more.
