

Certain North American Indian tribes passed their children through the limbs of a dogwood tree to protect them from childhood diseases.