

CHANCELLOR

Community Colleges and Rural Education
University of Alaska

- The System — The University of Alaska is the major provider of higher educational services for the state. Even though the population of the state is relatively small, the state's size (20% of the size of the continental U.S.) and geographical diversity provide major challenges to delivering our services.
- The Division — The Community Colleges and Rural Education division's primary mission is to serve rural Alaska through its statewide network of 10 Community Colleges, 13 Rural Education Centers and various statewide programs. Extensive nontraditional education delivery methods are used to provide programs to remote statewide locations.
- The Job — The CCRE Chancellor is one of five system Chancellors reporting to the President and is responsible for overall academic and administrative leadership of the division. The position requires: strong facilitation and coordination skills in dealing with a wide variety of constituencies in a cross-cultural environment; patience; perseverance; a tolerance for ambiguity; and an ability to effectively synthesize information. The person also must be an effective advocate for the division.

Nominations, applications and requests for the expanded position description should be directed to:
