

Miss Ruby Tansy Recovering Well From Grave Car Collision Injuries

Miss Ruby Tansy who was gravely injured in a three-car collision last August is back in Fairbanks.

She visited the Tundra Times office this week and walked in with the aid of a specially made cane.

Although she got around with difficulty, Miss Tansy was smiling and saying, "I'm feeling much better now. I'm starting to eat better also. You know I lost 30 pounds and I was just skin and bones for a long time."

Back in August, Ruby was driving with some other people to her home village of Cantwell when a car ahead of them attempted to pass another, but the car being passed apparently speeded up and the collision resulted.

Miss Tansy suffered multiple fractures of both arms and legs along with other injuries. She was in a serious condition for some time at the PHS Area Alaska Native Service Hospital in Anchorage.

Ruby is anxious to get back to work but at the present time she can do only limited work.

She is a graduate of the University of Alaska with a degree in mathematics. She has been active in native organizational work in the past.
