

'Safety City' could travel to your school

November continues to highlight Emergency Medical Services, in a focus on EMS that began this fall with the 2nd Annual Safety-Health Fair held at the University Center in Anchorage.

The highlight of the Safety Fair was Safety City, a miniature town created to help children understand the concept of safety and how they need to use safety and prevention in their lives everyday.

The city includes common road signs and a school and hospital, complete with a road and railroad. Children are encouraged to understand basic safety rules such as stopping at stop signs, stopping at railroad crossings and why it is so important to watch for cars.

Safety City is available to schools and the public upon request through Chugach Electric in Anchorage, telephone, 563-4545.

Lindsey Propes, Timothy Grosdidier and Esther Grosdidier took a tour of Safety City earlier this fall. The miniature town helps children understand the concept of safety.
