

TT chooses U of A-F national champions

In typical fashion the Associated Press wire service today declared Alabama the 1978 College Football National Champion. Earlier in the day, the "other" national wire service, United Press International awarded the University of Southern California Trojans the same honor.

This of course results in two national champs and you can take your pick between the two wire services depending on who your favorite of the two may be or you can do what this writer has done and simply not give a damn! In recent years I have spent very little time observing college football because of a lack of a system to clarify who the National Champion is each year.

In the UPI poll, the nation's coaches vote for the champion and in the AP poll the nation's sports writers vote for the champ. Until the NCAA establishes a playoff system to determine the champion, I think that I am going to declare the University of Alaska at Fairbanks the College Football Champion. This of course is based on a poll of Tundra Times sports staff

What do you mean that UAF doesn't have a football program, who cares?
