Alaska's five most vital resources

KING or CHINOOK

is the largest salmon, averaging 22 lbs.—often found exceeding 100 lbs. Life span is 4 to 6 years. Softer texture than the other species, is very rich in oil and breaks into large flakes. Color ranges from deep salmon to white.

SOCKEYE, RED or BLUEBACK is known as the salmon that loves a lake. Weighs about 7 lbs. maximum and lives about 6 years. Deep salmon colored meat breaks into medium sized flakes, is firm in texture and has considerable oil.

COHO, MEDIUM RED or SILVER usually weighs about 8 lbs. but has been known to weigh as much as 30. Matures in about 3 years. Color of meat is deep salmon and breaks into large flakes.

CHUM or KETA

is lighter in color and has less oil than the other varieties. Large flaked and coarsely textured. Life span is 3 to 5 years and average weight is 9 lbs.

PINK

is the smallest of the salmon (4 lbs.) but accounts for nearly half of the entire pack, and enjoys wide popularity everywhere. Small flaked and ranges in color from light to deep pink.

These are the five species of Alaska salmon which are commercially canned. Together, these five vital resources represent Alaska's most important industry—Canned Salmon!
