

Corps to clean up unsafe debris

The U.S. Army Engineer District of Alaska is proposing to clean up debris at former Department of Defense "White Alice" communication sites and an abandoned World War II Army base, according to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

The aim is to remove and dispose of unsafe and unsightly structures and associated debris, including toxic and/or hazardous materials identified at the sites.