

Environmental

The Environmental Protection Agency has awarded $47,087 for the design of a facility, for smaller Alaskan villages of 75-125 population which incorporated central waste disposal and provides safe, unpolluted water for drinking and other purposes, Stevens said.

The intent on this design is to develop modular units which are transportable to another location in the event the village is reached by a housing program that has water and sewer service, Stevens said.