

NCB to hold seminar for corporations, villages, tribes

The National Cooperative Bank (NCB) will be holding a strategic seminar for Alaska Native corporations, tribes and villages at the Sheraton Hotel, in Anchorage on Feb. 15. The seminar is being held for NCB's customers and is open to the media.

The topics that will be covered include: strategic planning for Alaska Native corporations, tribes and villages, the economy and its implications for business and investment planning, and the art of acquisitions.

NCB has a unique commitment to Alaska Native corporations, tribes and villages, which are cooperatively owned. The Bank provides financial services to Alaskan businesses and tribes, and funds projects that supply consumers with better goods, services, housing and community life. Last year NCB committed over $100 million to Alaskan enterprises.

NCB and its subsidiaries provide a broad array of financial services to the nation's cooperative business sector, creating economic growth and community development in urban and rural areas.

Cooperative enterprise provides the power of joint solutions to common problems, of sharing risks and rewards of the workplace, and provides a model for stimulating small business growth and new employment opportunities. NCB has provided funding over the years to more than two million small businesses.
