National Native News won all three radio programming awards during the Native American Journalists Association national conference held in Kamloops, British Columbia. The awards issued to the daily news program were: 1993 Best Radio News Reporting, 1993 Best Radio Feature, and 1993 Best Ongoing Radio Program, all first place.

Gary Fife, host and producer said, "We would have been pleased to win just one award, but to win all three is an honor beyond words."

National Native News is produced in Anchorage at the Alaska Public Radio Network and distributed by American Public Radio.
